The Honorable

[REDACTED]

Washington, D.C. 20515-2208

Dear Congressman [REDACTED]

I would like to congratulate you on your re-election to Congress. Please allow me to thank you for supporting a strong bilateral relationship between the Kingdom of Morocco and the United States of America.

As you know, Morocco was the first country to recognize the United States of America in 1777. Our Treaty of Peace and Friendship signed in 1786, which is still in force, established a strategic partnership that has remained important to both countries for more than 220 years -- from our first efforts to secure open sea commerce two centuries ago, through our 2004 free trade agreement and our fight against international terrorism today. Though historic, our alliance remains grounded in very modern principles -- a common commitment to democracy, open markets, human rights, security cooperation, and winning the struggle against terrorists and extremists. As you begin the 112th Congress, I would like to take this opportunity to highlight the milestones in our joint economic, political, and security initiatives and our hopes for the year ahead.

As we look to engage the challenges of the 21st century in an increasingly globalised world, where events that occur in one region can potentially send shockwaves across continents, we realize that our destinies are more interlinked today than they have ever been. As such, we know that the positive future of North Africa depends on advancing real economic and security integration in the region. This is why His Majesty King Mohammed VI has been calling for the opening of the borders between Algeria and Morocco and for a strong cooperation between the two countries. This will promote welfare, peace, and security in North Africa and the Sahel.

In the same spirit and to resolve the over 30 year dispute over the Western Sahara, Morocco, with the help of the international community, put forward in April of 2007 a compromise autonomy plan which was recognized as "serious and credible" by the United States and the United Nations. Based on a wide national and international consultation process, this autonomy plan was fully supported by many countries, while others openly welcomed it as being "constructive", "brave" and a good basis for dialogue.

The U.S. Congress has been especially supportive in backing this breakthrough autonomy initiative. In an overwhelming show of bipartisan support, a majority of the US Congress signed a letter endorsing Morocco's compromise plan in the 111th Congress. The last three US Administrations have also supported this important policy. With the help of the international community, Morocco is hopeful that a compromise and negotiated solution based on autonomy under Moroccan sovereignty can finally resolve this dispute.

In 2010, Morocco reaffirmed its irreversible commitment to democracy and human rights. As with the ground-breaking Family Law that enshrined equality between men and women, the free and fair 2002 and 2007 parliamentary elections, the free and fair local elections in 2009 and the human rights provisions guaranteed in the Constitution, we continue to create a human rights culture both at home and abroad.

As Morocco experiences these breakthrough democratic reforms, we also face strong security challenges. Terrorist groups, including al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM), have attempted to destabilize our region by bombing the innocent across North Africa. Indeed, the incidence of attacks by terrorists based in North Africa— against targets in and out of the region – has more than tripled since September 11, 2001. This poses a grave threat that we must meet by working closely together with both the United States, which has declared Morocco a major non-NATO ally and our regional partners. Our resolve to defeat the forces of terrorism has never been stronger. To succeed, we must continue our robust bilateral intelligence sharing and security cooperation to apprehend and dismantle terrorist groups before they act. Morocco's purchase of 24 Lockheed Martin F-16C/D fighter aircrafts from the U.S. and major joint military exercises are just small examples of our bilateral security cooperation.

Morocco is committed to working with the United States and other allies to promote peace and security abroad. Currently Morocco is ranked 19th in deploying troops as part of the UN peacekeeping operations. Our military recently completed peacekeeping missions in Haiti and Bosnia-Herzegovina, and has peacekeeping forces in many African countries, namely in Côte d'Ivoire and in the Democratic Republic of Congo. Morocco is also active in Africa and committed to delivering aid, resources, technical training and educational opportunities that encourage growth and prosperity for our continent.

While Morocco continues to fight terrorism and consolidate our political and human rights reforms, another important building block is working to eliminate poverty, illiteracy, and marginalization. Morocco has begun implementing the $697.5 million Millennium Challenge Compact to reduce poverty in our country. The Compact, which is the only one in the world especially dedicated to alleviate poverty, reflects a partnership between the people of America and the citizens of Morocco and is expected to increase Morocco's GDP by approximately $118 million annually and directly benefit a total of 600,000 of the neediest families. Morocco has already invested hundreds of millions of dollar to improve human development in the country and the MCC is making an important contribution to that comprehensive effort.

Morocco has achieved these milestones thanks also to the high level of respect and warm relations that has characterized our alliance with the United States. We are firmly committed to a strong, supportive, and mutually beneficial bilateral relationship. Again, I want to express my gratitude for your continued support and reiterate Morocco's commitment to providing regional and international leadership that enhances our mutual interests.

There are many challenges and opportunities ahead in 2011. A peaceful and realistic political resolution to the Saharan conflict is Morocco's top priority. This is the time for compromise and unity in our region. I would like to request the opportunity to meet with you to discuss these issues in greater detail. I look forward to working with you to advance our mutual interests and further strengthen the U.S.-Morocco alliance in the 112th Congress.

Sincerely,

The International Center for Terrorism Studies (ICTS)

Established in 1998, the activities of ICTS are guided by an International Research Council that offers recommendations for study on different aspects of terrorism, both conventional and unconventional. ICTS also serves as a coordinating body for a consortium of universities and think tanks throughout the world, namely the Inter-University Center for Terrorism Studies. ICTS is also affiliated with the Inter-University Center for Legal Studies (Washington, DC).

There exists the need to educate policy-makers, and the public in general, on the nature and intensity of the terrorism threat in the twenty-first century. As a member of the academic and research community, the Potomac Institute for Policy Studies has an intellectual obligation, as well as a moral and practical responsibility, to participate in the international effort to arrest the virus of terrorism. The purpose of the International Center for Terrorism Studies (ICTS), therefore, is four-fold:

- First, to monitor current and future threats of terrorism;
- Second, to develop response strategies on governmental and non-governmental levels;
- Third, to effect continual communication with policy-makers, academic institutions, business, media, and civic organizations; and
- Fourth, to sponsor research programs on critical issues, particularly those relating enabling technologies with policy, and share the findings nationally and internationally.

ICTS has sponsored, co-sponsored and participated in more than 350 events in many countries, including the U.S., Albania, Argentina, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, Colombia, France, India, Israel, Japan, Jordan, Morocco, the Netherlands, Peru, Poland, Romania, Sri Lanka, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, Ukraine, and United Kingdom. ICTS has published 100 books and 25 reports and ICTS activities were covered extensively by television, radio and press in over 60 countries.

2011 Report Update:

The Consequences of Terrorism—Update on al-Qaeda and other Terrorist Threats in the Sahel & Maghreb

Yonah Alexander

We learn from history that nothing is permanent in world affairs. Empires, nations, and people rise and decline, and others take their place. The only certainty is uncertainty and consequently a realistic analysis of factors that contribute to stability or instability of national, regional, and global security frameworks is critical.

Tragically, the Maghreb – Algeria, Libya, Mauritania, Morocco, and Tunisia – as well as adjacent parts of the Sahel – Chad, Mali, and Niger – have emerged as one of the most worrying strategic challenges to the international community, and yet for decades these regions have mostly been neglected by United States diplomacy. Consider, for example, the empirical data generated since September 11, 2001.

Terrorist attacks by al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM) and other extremist groups in both the Maghreb and Sahel increased 558% from their low during the period to a new high of 204 attacks in 2009, and remain dangerously high, with 178 in 2010. Thus, over the past nine years, more than 1,100 terrorist bombings, murders, kidnappings, and ambushes against both domestic and international targets have claimed almost 2,000 lives and 6,000 victims of violence. Moreover, according to open intelligence sources and a recent fact-finding trip to the region in January 2011, there exists growing evidence that AQIM, local traffickers, and possibly members of the Polisario are forming links with Latin American organized criminal groups for trafficking drugs and humans via transit networks into Europe.

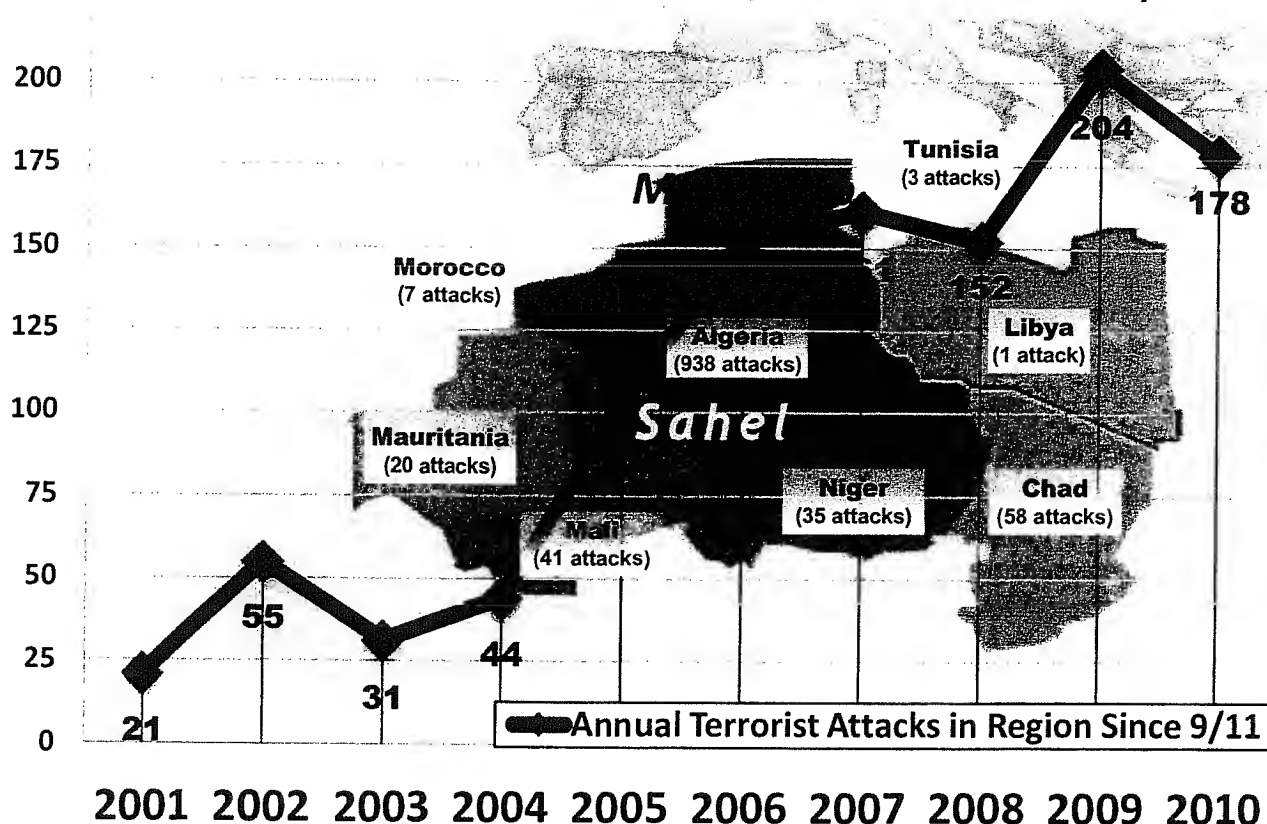

What is particularly of grave concern is that AQIM, jointly with the other al-Qaeda affiliates (e.g. al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula – AQAP – operating in Yemen, as well as al-Shabaab members in Somalia) currently and for the foreseeable future, represent a most dangerous threat both regionally and inter-regionally. Clearly in the failed and fragile states bordering the Sahara, al-Qaeda has established a safe haven and breeding ground for its activities.

Two major concerns feed into this arc of instability that stretches from the Red Sea and is poised to reach to the Atlantic. First, is the lingering 35-year old Western Sahara conflict, which is creating an opening for AQIM's expansion and also recruitment of hard-core Polisario members among the Sahrawi refugee camps in Algeria, further complicating the viability of a diplomatic resolution for the Western Sahara issue.

And second, the sudden and explosive recent popular street protests in Tunisia that ousted the authoritarian President, Zine el-Abidine Ben Ali, who had ruled the country for 23 years, open up the possibility that al-Qaeda will attempt to take advantage of the unfolding drama in its effort to destabilize the region.

The purpose of this updated report is to supplement two earlier special studies published in 2009 and January 2010. The publication titled “Why the Maghreb Matters: Threats, Opportunities, and Options for Effective Engagement in North Africa” (March 2009) was co-sponsored by the Conflict Management Program of the John Hopkins University jointly with the Potomac Institute for Policy Studies. This report was supported by a bipartisan panel of foreign policy experts, including General (ret.) Wesley Clark, Amb (ret.) Stuart Eizenstat, former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright, Professor William Zartman, and other distinguished academics and former diplomats.

Terrorist Attacks in North & West/Central Africa Since 9/11

The panel’s special report recommended that the new US administration “look around the corner,” as President Barack Obama had advocated, and engage the region more effectively to prevent the brewing crisis in security before it erupts. More specifically, the report outlined threats, opportunities, and options for the United States to promote peace and prosperity, and prevent a growing peril in North Africa. The nations of the Maghreb have long been at the crossroads of history and currently hold great potential as a bridge between the Islamic world and the West. The region could benefit greatly from increased regional economic integration that would make it an appealing market for Europe and the United States. But it also faces serious challenges: a firm toehold by al-Qaeda in the Sahara, inconsistent economic growth, a growing and restive young population, and regional disputes that impede economic and security cooperation, in particular the long-running dispute over Western Sahara.

The second report, “Maghreb & Sahel Terrorism: Addressing the Rising Threat from al-Qaeda and other Terrorists in North and West/Central Africa” (January 2010), which I authored and was published by the International Center for Terrorism Studies at the Potomac Institute for Policy Studies, presented an overview of terrorism and dealt in some detail with the security challenge in the region and its implications.

RECOMMENDATIONS:

The key insights and recommendations underlined in that study appear even more relevant, and urgent, a year later. They include the following steps that should be given close consideration by US policy makers and the international community in general:

1. Develop a comprehensive program in the affected countries to increase public awareness concerning the nature of jihadist terrorism as a form of low-intensity warfare being waged against the Maghreb and Sahel; how it affects the local populations; how it diverts resources away from economic development; and how it constrains political open space.
2. Strengthen the US intelligence mechanisms in order to provide more effective collection and analysis of data related to terrorist activities by al-Qaeda and other extremists in the region and beyond. And ensure that the information is used effectively by cooperating bodies in the region through providing equipment, training, and monitoring assistance.
3. Deny supporters of Islamic extremism in the Maghreb, Sahel, and elsewhere the capacity and freedom to engage in propaganda through effective information countermeasures, investments in local development, and open channels of communication with local leaders.
4. Expand US counterterrorism technical assistance to the area, particularly training for internal security bodies, police agencies, and the military, particularly under the umbrella of multilateral working groups to provide for adequate monitoring and transparency.
5. Encourage the governments in the region to continue with a “carrot-and-stick” approach, and with their efforts improve the economic and social conditions in these countries.
6. Improve the level of security coordination between the countries in the region so they can more effectively share intelligence and interdict terrorist networks and supply lines on the ground. Also improve the levels of economic cooperation between the nations in the region to spur increased trade and commerce that contributes to economic growth and reduces poverty as an underlying factor in fueling social unrest and extremism. Both security and economic cooperation in the Maghreb and Sahel would no doubt be enhanced by a resolution to the decades-old Western Sahara dispute, which continues to drive a wedge between two of the region’s most influential nations – Morocco and Algeria.
7. Face the intellectual challenge of radical Islam directly with “home-grown” religious and intellectual leaders who are able to challenge the misuse of Islam and channel religious tendencies into more productive social development opportunities.
8. Raise the diplomatic, economic, political, and military costs to Iran high enough to outweigh the benefits of supporting terrorism and exporting jihadist terrorism elsewhere.

In sum, a coherent and firm US policy vis-à-vis the threats of terrorism in Maghreb and Sahel would increase domestic public understanding and support in the US for sustained engagement with the nations of North and West/Central Africa. The updated documents incorporated in this report, particularly the statistical tables and terrorism chronology covering the period September 11, 2001 – December 31, 2010 make it clear that constructive and sustained engagement is vital, employing both “hard” (security, military, intelligence cooperation) and “soft” elements (economic and social development creating employment opportunities, education that equips students/trainees for jobs, and reduction of religious radicalism). Otherwise, the US, the EU, and our friends in the region will remain hostages to, and targets of, these ideological, theological, and political terrorists for the remainder of the 21st century.
